

Diminutive Digs for Modern Life

History tells us that big things, such as woolly mammoths, shoulder pads and (hopefully) supersized McMansions, eventually face extinction. Enter Jay Shafer, whose Sebastopol, California-based Tumbleweed Tiny House Company offers hip, teeny and eco-friendly digs as an alternative to wasteful steroidal palaces.

Tumbleweed's adorable, made-to-order, pint-sized pads range in size from the 40 square foot Vardo to the 500 square foot B52 Bungalow. Need to spread out? The optional dogtrot connector can string two or three structures together to make a larger home. Shafer's own itty-bitty abode is a mere 70 square feet and boasts a low environmental impact and zero wasted space. Visit tumbleweedhouses.com for more info. —Jessica Ridenour

Sex, Drugs... and Spiritual Cinema?

What do you get when you cross a cult film star and a punk rock producer? Surprisingly, you get an innovative line of new age cinema DVDs. Searching for something beyond sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, producer Greg Ross (The Lunachicks, The Buzzcocks) and indie actor Will Keenan (Tromeo & Juliet) have joined forces to form Realization Studios, an imprint specializing in spiritually enlightening documentaries.

The new line includes the best-selling political documentary Horns and Halos, the Iraqi-made The Dreams of Sparrows and the media-scouring Orwell Rolls in His Grave. Find these films and others at gokartfilms.com. —JR

WEBSITINGS

If you're tired of the seemingly endless bad news about the environment, check out wildlife.greatnews.net. By reporting only positive news, the Great News Network hopes to show readers that their planet-friendly actions do make a difference.

Is there a creative genius inside you longing to be free? Release your inner Picasso with mripicassohead.com. Start with a blank canvas, drag and drop an array of facial features—and voila! You've created a masterpiece without leaving your desk.

Playing the stock market is no longer just for the Brooks Brothers and soul-sellers set. Greenmoneyjournal.com offers socially and environmentally responsible market news and information for eco-conscious investors.